

Georgiana Neverall Mystery 3: Drip Dead by Christy Evans

Contributed by Clare
Tuesday, 14 June 2011
Last Updated Wednesday, 15 June 2011

Title: Drip Dead
Author: Christy Evans
Publisher: Berkley Prime Crime
Genre: Cozy Mystery
Publication date: February 2011
ISBN: 978-0-425-23989-6
Pages: 243
Series: Georgiana Neverall Mystery, Book 3
Reviewer: Clare

Heat Level:

Rating:

Georgiana

Neverall wants to check out her mother's house before she buys it. Since she's a plumber's apprentice, she decides to crawl under the house to check the pipes herself, but instead of finding regular old pipes, she finds a body amid a bunch of boxes. That dead body turns out to be Georgiana's mom's fiancé, Gregory Whitlock. When Georgiana's mom is put in jail for murder, Georgiana is going to have to uncover the mystery surrounding Gregory's death to clear her name. As she digs into his past, she discovers more questions than answers surrounding his death and the boxes he was buried with. Will she be able to discover the truth before the murderer tries to bury the secrets and Georgiana with them? This is a fast-paced cozy mystery full of action and humor. Georgiana makes a perfect sleuthing heroine with her down-to-earth, easy-going attitude. Throw in her bumbling dogs, funny best friend, and nosy mom, and you have the perfect ensemble of characters in this entertaining read. I love how all the characters interacted; it feels as if I could be reading about my own friends and family. Christy Evans kept me turning pages with solid characters, witty dialog, and a leave-me-guessing until the end who-dun-it. This series just keeps getting better and we even get practical plumbing tips at the beginning of each chapter. Fans of cozy mysteries won't want to miss this one!